This is a digital copy of a book that was preserved for generations on library shelves before it was carefully scanned by Google as part of a project to make the world's books discoverable online.

It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that's often difficult to discover.

Marks, notations and other marginalia present in the original volume will appear in this file - a reminder of this book's long journey from the publisher to a library and finally to you.

To the Right Honourable
The Lord Mayor of Birmingham

(Mr. Councillor JAMES SMITH).

My Lord Mayor,

In respectfully dedicating this little volume to your Lordship, I venture to express the hope it will be found of sufficient general interest to warrant its publication, and that it may be permitted to mark an important landmark in the history of Birmingham and, may I add, in your own life. The honour conferred on the City by the creation of a Lord Mayor, and on your Lordship in being the first to fill that important office, is an epoch worthy of commemoration. That the Citizens of Birmingham appreciate the conduct of their First Lord Mayor is fully testified by the fact that they have asked you to fill the Civic Chair for a second time.

I am,
My Lord Mayor,
Your obedient and obliged Servant,
CHARLES EDWARD SCARSE.

BIRMINGHAM TRANQUILLITY,

1776.

In England's fair capital, every year,
A tumult is raiſed about chooſing Lord Mayor;
Each party engages with fury and ſpleen,
And nothing but ſtriſe and contention is ſeen.

Ye wrangling old cits, let me beg you'd look down,
And copy from Birmingham's peaceable town,
Where ſouls ſixty thouſand or more you may view,
No juſtice dwells here, and but conſtables two.

In no place beſides that's ſo populous grown,
Was ever leſs noiſe or diſturbances known:
All hands find employment, and when their work's done,
Are happy as any ſouls under the ſun.

With hammer and file time is carefully beat,
For ſuch is the muſic of every ſtreet:
The anvil's ſharp ſound is the artiſt's delight,
And ſtamps, lathes, and preſſes in concert unite.

Let cities and boroughs for conteſts prepare,
In chooſing of ſheriffs, recorder, or mayor,
With moſt kinds of titles they've nothing to do,
Nor diſcord in chooſing of officers ſhew.

The envy and hatred elections bring on,
Their hearty intention is always to ſhun;
No polling, no ſcratching, no ſcrutinies riſe,—
Who friendſhip eſteem muſt ſuch meaſures deſpiſe.

To far diſtant climes doth her commerce extend;
Her channels of traffic admit of no end;
And Birmingham, whilſt there is trade in the land,
In brighteſt invention unrivalled ſhall ſtand.

J. Freeth.

BIRMINGHAM JUBILATION, 1896.

Not only London now, but Birmingham each year,
Is busily engaged in choosing a Lord Mayor.
Here is no strife or discord, all peacefully agree,
In private meetings settle, who our Lord Mayor shall be.

Our gracious Queen, the Town into a City raised,
And by all the citizens her Majesty was praised;
But louder were the praises which on every side were heard,
When our whilome simple Mayor, she turned into a Lord.

How many years have passed, and what changes taken place,
Since first I sang her glories, and bestowed the Muses' grace!
From an almost country village, into a mighty town,
This seat of all the industries has wonderfully grown.

The spirit of true progress, her Council now displays,
Striving ever how it best the City's fame can raise;
Her noble banner "Forward" have so wide unfurled,
She is known now as the City best governed in the world.

As I ramble now about, O the wonders that I see!
Free Parks for recreation, and Libraries also Free,
Where all may be partakers of the treasures of the mind;
And Free Art Galleries, where we stores of beauty find.

And the City's healthy too, the streets are paved and clean,
And splendid are the goods in shop-windows to be seen.
And such the streams of light, the gas-lamps now display,
That the City in the night, is a rival to the day.

And largely has her trade increased, and will with time increase,
For though she weapons makes of war, she a lover is of peace;
And as each year passes by, may each new Lord Mayor find
A Birmingham more healthy, both in body and in mind!

PREFACE.

THE Editors of the following ſheets flatter themſelves that any apology for offering them to the public, would be unneceſſary:---the utility of ſuch publications, when compiled with care and accuracy, has ever been acknowledged. How far they have been ſucceſsful in theſe points, on which alone the merit depends, muſt be left to the deciſion of the public. Thus far however they can take upon themſelves to aſſert, that no expence has been thought too much to procure an authentic Liſt of the Inhabitants, &c. They are certain, nothwithſtanding, that no work of this kind can be abſolutely perfect; for were it poſſible to procure a correct liſt in the courſe of a week, ſo fluctuating are all human affairs, that before the end of another week, there would be ſeveral errors (occaſioned by deaths, removals, partnerſhips commenced, others diſſolved, and various other cauſes) which no penetration can foreſee, no human prudence prevent; as ſuch they flatter themselves that a candid and generous public, will not, in any degree, impute it to negligence or inattention in thoſe, whoſe higheſt ambition it is to merit rit and acknowledge, the infinite number of favours ſhowered down upon them, and who are with the moſt profound reſpect and gratitude,

That publick's

An ACCOUNT of

The ancient and preſent State of

BIRMINGHAM.

BIRMINGHAM perhaps is as ancient a town as any in the kingdom; it was however accounted a place of very conſiderable traffick, ſo far back as the time of Edward the Confeſſor, and was particularly famous for it's manufactories of iron wares of all ſorts; and tho' it is moſt probable that it, as well as moſt other places, has undergone many changes of proſperity and adverſity in ſuch a number of years; yet, from it's defenceleſs ſtate, for it doth not appear that ever it had any fortifications, it might ſuffer leſs from the dreadful calamities of war than thoſe places that were more capable of being defended—and as we may readily imagine that the thoughts of the inhabitants were principally, if not entirely engaged in their various employments, they maintained a ſtrict neutrality in all civil commotions, that for centuries embroiled this unhappy land; victor or vanquiſhed they would naturally look upon as friends, ſo long as they purchaſed their commodities and paid for them; when it happened otherwiſe, their prudence would incline them to ſilence, and induce them to bear their loſſes with ſome degree of patience, when they looked round and compared the ſituation of thouſands with their own.

After William the Conqueror had got poſſeſſion of the crown, we find Birmingham in the poſſeſſion of William Fitz-Auſculf (whoſe ſeat was the Caſtle of Dudley) as well as ſeveral other towns, or rather villages, of leſs note, in the neighbourhood: It is moſt probable that it was taken from the rightful owner and given to the abovementioned perſon, who was one of the King's followers from Normandy, as a reward for his ſervices, as almoſt every page in the hiſtories of thoſe times are diſgraced with ſuch wanton and inhuman acts of cruelty, committed by theſe new lords againſt the poor conquered Engliſh, as makes humanity ſhudder at the bare recital. How much happier might we be in theſe golden days, when our gracious King who now fills the throne, is truly the father of his people! Safe in our perſons—ſafe in our property—unreſtrained in matters of faith and religion, and in every other article, ſave where the intereſt of our neighbour makes its proper! we may juſtly be ſaid to enjoy the ineſtimable bleſſings of freedom in the fulleſt extent of the word.

By the Conqueror's ſurvey it was rated at four hides of land, having woods of half a mile long and as much broad; all being then held of the ſaid William Fitz-Auſculf, by one Richard, and valued at 20l. per ann.—But that it's appellation was originally from ſome ancient owner, in the time of the Saxons, need not be doubted; the laſt part of it (viz. ham) denoting an home, or dwelling, and the former manifeſting itſelf to be a proper name. Whether the abovementioned Richard was paternal anceſtor to thoſe who afterwards aſſumed this place for their ſurname, cannot poſitively be affirmed; but certain it is, that the Paganells, who immediately ſucceeded William Fitz-Auſculf in the enjoyment of Dudley-caſtle, and the ſubſtance of all other his lands, paſt it away with other poſſeſſions, to be held by military ſervice; for in the twelfth of Henry II. amongſt the knights fees then certified by Gervaſe Paganell, it appears that Peter de Birmingham held nine of him, de veteri feoffamento; ſo that it is hereby clear, that the father of the ſaid Peter, whoſe name was William,

if not his grandfather, became firſt enfeoffed thereof in Henry the firſt's time.

This Peter being ſewer to the ſaid Gervaſe Paganell, had a caſtle here, (of which at preſent not the leaſt trace is left) which ſtood not a bow-ſhot from St. Martin's church, on the Southweſt-ſide, moſt probably within the moat, which might be intended as a defence, ſuch being very frequent in thoſe times, and by a grant of King Henry II. as alſo of the ſame Gervaſe Paganell, in his (King Henry's) preſence, a weekly market was held upon Thurſday; which market and certain other priviledges, King Richard I. afterwards confirmed to William de Birmingham, ſon and ſucceſſor to the ſaid Peter, who bore for his arms azure, a bend lozenge, or, as appears by his ſeal and ſeveral other authorities.

Out of this family doubtleſs came the Birmingham of Ireland, who ſettled there very anciently, perhaps in the reign of Henry the ſecond. Upon the firſt conqueſt of that kingdom by Richard Strongbow, for in the ſecond of Henry III. there was a controverſy, touching the title of certain lands there, betwixt Eva de Birmingham, then wife to G. de Mariſco, Juſtice of Ireland, and Reginald Talbot; for juſtification whereof, the ſaid Reiginald pretended a charter made to him by King John, at ſuch time as he was Earl of Moreton; and it is alſo certain that there was one Peter de Birmingham, an eminent man there about that time, for King Henry III, in the eighteenth year of his reign, made him a grant of twenty marks per ann. to be received out of the Exchequer at Dublin, for his ſupport in his ſervice.

William de Birmingham, ſon and ſucceſſor to the laſt mentioned William, in the twenty-fifth of Henry III. had a ſuit for certain lands lying in this place, with John the ſon of Robert de Hathewy's, for the determination of which, certain juſtices of aſſize were then conſtituted. In the thirty fourth of Henry the third, he was by a ſpecial patent exempted from ſerving on juries; and the next year following had a charter for a fair to be annually held here for the ſpace of four days, beginning on the Eve of the Aſcenſion, commonly called Holy Thurſday.

Not long after this there grew ſome diſpute between Roger de Someri, Baron of Dudley, of whoſe fee Birmingham was held, and this William de Birmingham, touching the ſervices due by him to the ſaid Roger, for his manor, with the members thereunto belonging; for which he required that the ſaid William ſhould perform the ſervice of eight knights fees, a half and fourth part, and alſo do ſuit to the court at Dudley for the knights fees belonging thereto, once every three weeks; whereupon they came to an agreement in the forty-ſixth of Henry the third: That the ſaid William ſhould do ſervice for ſo many knights fees, as aforeſaid, and appear at the court of Dudley only twice every year, viz. at that held next after Michaelmas, and that likewiſe next after Eaſter; and that whenſoever the King's writ of right ſhould be executed there, that is, when it ſhould be neceſſary to ſummon all the knights and peers of the ſame court, holding by military ſervice, to give judgment in caſes of difficulty; as alſo for the trial of a thief, upon reaſonable ſummons he ſhould not fail to make his appearance: upon which agreement the ſaid Roger de Someri releaſed to him his ſuit of court from three weeks to three weeks.

The next thing memorable of this William de Birmingham, was his ſiding with his father-in-law, Thomas de Aſtley and the other barons, in that grand rebellion againſt King Henry the third, and that being ſlain in the battle of Eveſham in the forty-ninth of Henry the third, and his lands forfeited, this his manor of Birmingham was rated at forty pounds, and the inheritance of it given by the king, with divers lordſhips more, forfeited by others, unto Roger de Clifford, for his faithful ſervices. However by virtue of the dictum de Kenilworth, that is, a proclamation iſſued by the King whilſt he beſieged Kenilworth Caſtle; according to which the greateſt part of men's lands, ſo confiſcate, might be redeemed by compoſition; this, with the reſt, upon ſatisfaction made according to the tenure of that decree, was repoſſeſſed by by William de Birmingham, ſon and heir to the rebel abovementioned; who in the eleventh of Edward I. obtained a charter of free warren throughout all his demeſne lands here; as alſo within the manor of Stockton in Worceſterſhire, &c. &c.

In the thirteenth of Edward I. the ſaid William de Birmingham, upon a quo warranto brought againſt him and all others who exerciſed or claimed any liberties or priviledges within their lordſhips, exhibited King Henry the ſecond's charter for the Thurſday-market—and for the fair and free warren King Henry the third's charter, pleading preſcription for Weyf's gallows, with courtleet, and aſſize of bread and beer, all which were allowed.—The next year following he had letters of protection, upon the king's purpoſed transfutation, whom he was to attend therein. Whether at that time he went beyond ſea, conſidering it doth not appear from our hiſtorians, that the king himſelf was out of England, is uncertain, but in the twenty-fifth of the ſame king's reign, 'tis certain that he was in Gaſcoigny in his ſervice under the conduct of the Earl of Lincoln, and John de St. John (a great baron of thoſe days) where intending to relieve Bellegard, then beſieged by the Earl of Arras; the ſaid earl and baron divided their forces, the lord St. John leading the van through a wood, who being preſently encountered by the enemy, and the earl not ſeconding him, was overpowered by numbers, and ſo routed—and himſelf, the ſaid Sir William de Birmingham and eight more knights, beſides a great number of 'ſquires, were taken priſoners in triumph to Paris.

The above Sir William died about the thirty-ſecond of Edward the firſt; for in that year John de Aylſton, clerk, was preſented to the church of Birmingham, by Iſabel de Birmingham, his widow. From Sir William de Birmingham deſcended another William, and alſo Henry, a younger ſon, who was afterwards made a knight: As to the laſt William who ſucceeded his father, in the ſecond of Edward the ſecond, his bailiffs diſtrained divers inhabitants of Bromſgrove and Norton, commonly called King's Norton, for toll in the market here, ſo that there grew a ſuit betwixt twixt them; whereupon he produced the charters of divers kings, as alſo that of Gervaſe Paganel, formerly mentioned, for juſtification of his market; he further alledged, that his anceſtors, for ſo the pleading calls them, had a market here before the Norman conqueſt, (by which it is pretty plain that his family as well as many others, had been obliged to purchaſe from the rapacious conqueror and his followers, thoſe very lands and lordſhips which had been poſſeſſed by their anceſtors time immemorial; it likewiſe convinces us of the early importance of this ſcene of induſtry, and that whilſt the ſeveral kings were granting charters, &c. they were convinced they were doing no more than juſtice to the injured family) but the men of Bromſgrove and Norton, to this anſwered, that thoſe lordſhips where they ſo inhabited, were of the ancient demeſne of the crown of England, and that they, as all other reſident upon the like lands, ought to be free from payment of toll throughout the realm for all petty commodities, as victuals, &c. except it could appear that they bought and ſold as common merchants; upon which they were acquitted by the judgment of the court, having coſts awarded them againſt the ſaid bailiffs.

In the eleventh of Edward the ſecond this William was a knight, after which time no more mention is made of him; but his ſon, whoſe name was likewiſe William, was honoured with many eminent employments, viz. in the eighteenth of Edward the ſecond, for chuſing 400 foot ſoldiers within this county, except the towns of Warwick and Coventry, and arming them in defence of the realm; and likewiſe the ſame year for electing Knights Eſquires, and other men at arms, to attend the King into Gaſcoigny; the next enſuing year, he was a commiſſioner appointed to inquire and certify the names of all thoſe in this county, that having 40l. lands per annum, had not received military arms, as alſo for the arraying of men according to the ſtatute of Wincheſter. In the 20th of Edward the ſecond, he had the cuſtody of Dudley Caſtle, with the appurtenances, but this was ſo granted to him by thoſe that then exerciſed royal power in the king's name, name, for the king was then a priſoner, and ſhortly after depoſed and cruelly murdered.

The record ſays, That it was upon the forfeiture of Hugh le Deſpencer, the younger, that the ſaid William was put in poſſeſſion of the abovementioned caſtle, perhaps, that upon the death of John de Someri, which happened about four years before, leaving none but female heirs, the ſame Hugh had the truſt thereof, as the king's eſpecial favourite, committed to his charge.

In the firſt of Edward the third, this William was in commiſſion with John Murdak, for conſervation of the peace in this county, as alſo to put the ſtatute of Wincheſter in execution: So likewiſe in the fifth of Edward the third, being at that time a knight, it is uncertain how long he had the cuſtody of Dudley Caſtle, but in the ſeventh of Edward the third 'tis evident that it was in his hands, for by his patent, being to anſwer for the profits thence ariſing unto the king's exchequer, and then complaining that the treaſurer and the barons did refuſe to admit of his accounts, wherein he had charged ſuch wages as had been paid to the porter and watchman of the ſaid caſtle, and to the foreſter and keepers of the chace of Penſened, as alſo of the parks of Dudley and Sedgley, and the old park pertaining to the ſaid caſtle, but the king directed a ſpecial mandamus to the ſaid treaſurer and barons commanding them to let it paſs. In the ninth of Edward the third, he was in commiſſion for arraying of men, as well knights as others, according to their ſeveral ſtates and degrees, in order to the ſtatute of Wincheſter; to the end that they might be in readineſs for the defence of the realm, whenſoever they might be called upon, in which commiſſion he is called William de Birmingham, ſenior; ſo alſo in two others in the ſame year, the one for conſervation of the peace and the ſtatute of Northampton, and the other of array.

To the laſt Sir William ſucceeded Sir Fouk de Birmingham, Knight, of whom mention is made in the 16th of Edward the Third, he having then lent 48 marks to Sir Baldwin Frevill, of Tamworth Caſtle, for which he had five mills at Tamworth, viz. three in Warwickſhire, and two in Staffordſhire, in leaſe for one year.

In

In the 20th of Edward the Third, he was retained by Thomas Biſhop of Durham, to attend the King in his French expedition.

In the 25th of Edward the Third, he was one of the knights of this ſhire in parliament, then held at Weſtminſter; ſo alſo in the parliament of the 35th of Edw. the Third; the ſame year he was a commiſſioner for conſervation of the peace in this county. The next year he ſerved again in parliament held at Weſtminſter, as one of the knights of this ſhire; ſo alſo in the 39th and 40th of Edward the Third, in the latter of which he was one of the commiſſioners of array in this County; and likewiſe in the 41ſt of Edward the Third.—And laſtly, in the 47th of Edward the Third, one of knights of the ſhire in the parliament then held at Weſtminſter.

To him ſucceeded, John, his ſon and heir, who in the 5th of Edward the Third, was a knight, and in the 2d of Richard the Second, ſheriff of this county and Leiceſtershire; and in the 4th of Richard the Second ſerved in parliament at Northampton, as one of the knights of the ſhire, being the ſame year ſheriff for the counties of Buckingham and Bedford. In the 5th of Richard IId. he was again one of the knights for this county in parliament then held at Weſtminſter, and a commiſſioner for raiſing power againſt the rebels, that is John Wickliffe and his followers; ſo likewiſe the year next enſuing. In the 8th of Richard IId. he ſerved again in parliament at Weſtminſter; was also a commiſſioner for aſſeſſing a 15th and 10th then granted to the King; and the ſame year conſtituted ſheriff for this county and Leiceſtershire, but the certain time of his death I have not been able to diſcover.

After which Elizabeth, his widow, one of the daughters and heireſſes of William de la Plaunch, by whom he had no iſſue, married to the Lord Clinton, and held this lordſhip of Birmingham in dower, till her death, which happened in the 2d of Henry the Sixth.

The inheritance of this lordſhip was by ſome entail ſettled upon the heir male of this family, viz. another William de Birmingham, ſon of William, ſon to John, uncle to the before-mentioned Sir Fouk; for it appears, in the 20th of Richard the Second, he confirmed unto certain feoffees to the uſe of the lady Elizabeth, then the wife of Sir John de Clinton, but formerly of Sir John de Birmingham, an eſtate for life, in this manner, ſaving the reverſion to himſelf and his heirs, and yet ſtiled himſelf Dominus de Birmingham, before her death, as is evident by his preſentation of a prieſt in the 4th of Henry the Fourth, to Clodſhall's Chantry, in the Church of St. Martin here at Birmingham. And ſo was reputed, notwithſtanding the intereſt that Edmund Lord Ferrers of Chartley, had therein, in right of Elene his wife, as by the inquiſition taken after his death may ſeem.

in

This William de Birmingham was not much inferior to any of his anceſtors, for public employments in this county;—in the 1ſt of Henry the Fifth he ſerved as one of the knights for this ſhire in parliament then held at Weſtminſter; yet afterwards, till the 17th of Henry the Sixth, lived retired, when he was firſt put in commiſſion for conſervation of the peace; and the ſame year had a ſpecial exemption that no purveyor or victualler ſhould take any proviſions within this his lordſhip, for the expences of the king's houſhold; in which patent the king calls him Dilectus Armiger noſtes.—In the 21ſt of Henry the Sixth, he underwent the office of ſheriff for this county and Leiceſterſhire; in the 27th, he was a knight; in the 28th he was a commiſſioner for aſſeſſing a ſubſidy then granted to the king in parliament, as alſo for treating with the people about lending money to the king; but after Henry the Sixth's time I do not find him in any public ſervice, whereby I conclude, that he adhered to the houſe of Lancaſter, for he did not die till the 18th of Edward the Fourth, leaving Wm. his ſon and heir, 30 years of age; which ſaid Sir William married Iſabel, the daughter and heireſs of William Hitton, and by her had iſſue William, who died the 15th of Henry the Seventh, leaving Edward his grandchild and heir, not much above three years old, whoſe wardſhip being in the 17th of Henry the Seventh, granted by the king to Edward Lord Dudley, together with the cuſtody of lands of his inheritance—this Birmingham was purchaſed, it ſeems, by Elizabeth Birmingham, his mother, for ſhe afterwards ſold it to William Conningſley, ſerjeant at law.

This Edward was the laſt of the family that had any poſſeſſions here; for being cotemporary with that ambitious man John Dudley, afterwards Viſcount L'Iſle, more commonly known by thoſe greater titles which he ſometimes had, viz. Earl of Warwick and Duke of Northumberland—he was in a ſtrange manner deprived of this lordſhip, his lawful inheritance. The ſaid John having poſſeſſed himſelf of Dudley Caſtle, caſt his eye upon Birmingham as a moſt deſirable object, and a proper ornament for ſo noble a ſeat, and he was therefore determined to poſſeſs it, let the conſequence be what it would; but he was obliged to be extremely wary in his proceedings, for there were obſtacles to ſurmount, that, to a perſon either leſs ambitious, or more honeſt, would have been utterly inſurmountable —but he knew no law but his intereſt; no religion, but what adminiſtred to his pride; no conſcience, but what was ſubſervient to his avarice. Had he made propoſals for purchaſing, he knew his offers would have been rejected with ſcorn, as it was in poſſeſſion, and the principal reſidence of ſuch a reſpectable family, who had enjoyed it ſeveral hundred years; beſides, ſuch propoſals might in ſome meaſure have been the means of diſcovering the villany which was manifeſted upon this occaſion afterwards. He therefore makes himſelf maſter of it at an eaſier rate, if purchaſing it at the expence of a good conſcience, and a good name, may be called ſo. When he had formed his plan, which he thought could not fail of ſucceſs, he obliged ſome of his agents to take lodgings in Birmingham, and to learn when the ſaid Edward Birmingham was to ride from home; which being accordingly done, they ſo contrived their buſineſs, that one of their plot ſhould ride leiſurely before, ſo that they might ſoon, by keeping but an ordinary pace, be overtaken by him; whereupon they watched an opportunity to ſtrike into the ſaid Birmingham's company, as travellers, with whom they rode ſoberly for ſome time; but being come up to their confederate, forthwith ſet upon him for his purſe; ſo that the villain thus ſeemingly robbed, makes purſuit after them, them, and likewiſe after Birmingham, as one of the gang, who being thereupon apprehended and proſecuted, apparently ſaw his danger.

The buſineſs now, therefore, working according to Dudley's firſt deſign, there were others employed to Mr. Birmingham, with overture, how he might ſave his life, by making the Viſcount L'Iſle his friend, in giving up his lordſhip of Birmingham to him; which, that it might bear the better colour, and be the more valid, was performed by yielding it to the king, and ratified by a ſpecial act of parliament, the tenor whereof was as follows:

"Whereas Edward Byrmingham, late of Byrmingham, in the county of Warwick, Eſqr otherwiſe callid Edward Bermingham, Eſquire, ys and ſtandyth lawfully indettid to our ſovereing Lord the Kynge, in diverse grete ſummes of money; and alſo ſtandyth at the mercy of his highneſs, for that the ſame Edward ys at this preſent convicted of felony; our ſeide ſovereign Lord the Kyng ys contentid and pleaſed, that for and in recompence and ſatisfaction to his grace of the ſeyde ſummes of money, to accepte of the ſeyde Edward, the manour & Lordſhip of Byrmingham, otherwiſe Byrmincham, with the appurtenances, lying and being in the county of Warwick; and all and ſingular other lands and tenements, reverſions, rents, ſervices, and hereditaments of the ſaid Edward Byrmingham, ſet, lying and being in the county of Warwick afforeſayde. Bey't theretor ordeyned and enacted, by the authority of this preſent parliament, that our ſeyde ſovereign Lord the Kynge ſhall have and hold to him and his heirs and aſſignes for ever, the ſeyde manour and lordſhip of Byrmingham, &c. &c."——In which act there is a reſervation of 40l. per ann. to the ſaid Edward and Elizabeth his wife, during their lives.

Thus by an artful ſtroke of villany an ancient and honourable family was deprived of their paternal eſtate, and not only ſo, but the proprietor ſtigmatized as a felon. The method the abovementioned ignobleman, the viſcount L'Iſle, took to poſſeſs himſelf of his neighbour's property, might make the ſons of rapine, fraud and corruption bluſh that they have not made greater greater improvement in their reſpective profeſſions—at the ſame time it holds out a ſtriking leſſon to thoſe who ſet all laws, divine and human, at defiance, in order to ſatisfy their rapacious and avaricious diſpoſitions.

The viſcount L'Iſle was in the higheſt favour with his ſovereign, who indeed may be ſaid to have abetted him in his cruel and unjust proceedings, for notwithſtanding their ſham pretences of Mr. Birmingham being indebted to the king, which was merely an artifice to blind the prying eyes of the public, the ſaid eſtate was granted by the king to the said viſcount L'Iſle a few years afterwards, who was either beloved or feared by all ranks and conditions of men—he was made Earl of Warwick and Duke of Northumberland, in ſhort he enjoyed every honour that his ſovereign could beſtow—but notwithſtanding all his greatneſs, juſtice at length overtook him for his crimes, for in the firſt of Mary he was attainted and loſt his head, when all his eſtates became forfeited to the crown.—Learn from this, all you, who though bleſſed with abundance, behold with envy the poſſeſſions of your neighbour—you whom neither honour nor conſcience can reſtrain from committing depredations on their property or reputation, ſtill keep this important truth in your mind, that the eternal juſtice is not to be deluded, or evaded; and though mercy may hold her hand for a time, in order to give the offender an opportunity of renouncing his errors, yet that is not always the caſe, for we very frequently ſee them taken in the execution of their ſchemes and made public examples, but even if they ſhould be fortunate enough to eſcape that ſhame and puniſhment, let them not deem themſelves ſecure, for vengeance will moſt aſſuredly overtake them, and exact full retribution for all their enormous offences. Perhaps ſome may think ſo particular an account of the family of the Birminghams ſuperfluous and unneceſſary, it may be ſo—yet it ſerves to throw ſome light upon the ſubject, and gives an idea of what the town muſt be, when it was conſidered as an appendage to Dudley, in compariſon of which it is at this day, and is therefore not altogether unintereſting.

In

In the thirty-fifth of Henry the Third, a grant was made for the holding another fair yearly for three days, viz. on the eve of St. John Baptiſt, and the two days next following, the Sheriff of Worceſter having then command to proclaim it accordingly throughout his liberties.

In the twelfth of Edward IId. the inhabitants at the inſtance of Audamare de Valence, Earl of Pembroke, obtained a licence to take toll of all vendible commodities brought hither to be ſold for the ſpace of three years, viz. for every quarter of corn one farthing, and ſo in proportion for other goods, towards paving the town; but this work was not compleated within that time, nor of fifteen years afterwards; for in the 7th of Henry the Third, they had another patent in like manner to take toll for three years more.—'Tis no wonder that a work, attended with such an expence as new paving a town neceſſarily muſt be, was not compleated by ſuch ſlender reſources as theſe grants inveſted them with, even if we ſuppoſe the town only to have contained one-fourth of the ſpace it now occupies, and money to have been at ten times its preſent value.

Some account of the Hoſpital of St. Thomas the Apoſtle.

This was ſituate at the end of Town, and on the right hand the road leading to Wolverhampton, and nearly oppoſite the ſign of the Bull, which 'tis probable was near the top of Snow-hill, and that the ſtreet which now goes by the name of Bull-ſtreet, took it from that inn. But as to the original foundation of the ſaid hoſpital, there are no accounts to be found which throw any light upon the ſubject; the only teſtimony concerning it is the certificate made by the commiſſioners upon their ſurvey in the 37th of Henry the Eighth, by which it appears to have been erected by ſome of the anceſtors of the Birmingham family, for one Prieſt to ſing maſs daily therein for the ſouls of the founders for ever; as alſo that the late Lord of Birmingham (viz. Edward Birmingham, Eſq; did grant the patronage of it to John Pretty, for 99 years; which ſaid John paſſed away his title therein to Mr. Clement Throcmorton, Gent.

Gent.—The firſt mention of it is in the 13th of Edw. the Firſt, wherein it appeareth, that Thomas de Maidenhacke gave unto it ten acres of Heath in Aſton; Will de Birmingham, 10 acres likewiſe; and Ranulph de Rokeby, 3 acres of land, in Saluteley. About that time were divers cottages and lands lying alſo in Birmingham and the adjacent villages, given to it by ſundry others, viz. 22 acres of land, and half an acre of meadow, by the ſaid Will. de Birmingham, and the reſt by a number of ordinary perſons; for all which the prior and brethren thereof obtained the king's eſpecial pardon in the fourth of Edward IId. in regard they had been given thereto after publication of the Statute of mortmain made in the 7th of Edward the Firſt.

In the 24th of Edward the Third, Fouk de Birmingham and Richard Spencer, gave thereunto two meſſuages and an hundred acres of land lying in Aſton and Birmingham, to find a prieſt to celebrate divine ſervice daily at the altar of our bleſſed Lady in the Church of the ſaid hoſpital for the ſouls of Will. le Mecas and Margery his wife, and of certain others. The clear yearly value of all which lands and tenements belonging thereto, over and above repriſes, were in the 26th of Henry the Eighth, certified to be 8l. 5s. 3d. at which time Sir Edward Tofte was Chantry prieſt there; but in the 37th of Henry the Eighth, the value, above repriſes, was rated at 8l. 8s. 9d.

The GILD of the HOLY CROSS.

THIS hall was ſituate in New-ſtreet, on the place where the Free-ſchool now ſtands. It was founded in the time of Richard IId. Thomas de Sheldon, John Coleſhil, John Goldſmyth, and William alte Slow, obtained a licence from that prince, in the 6th year of his reign, to grant lands of 20 marks per ann. value, lying in Birmingham and Edgbaſton, for the maintenance of two prieſts to celebrate divine ſervice, to the honour of God, our bleſſed Lady, his mother, the holy Croſs, St. Thomas the Martyr, and St. Catharine, in the Church of St. Martin, here at Birmingham.

Within

Within ten years afterwards the inhabitants of this town, by the name of the bailiffs and commonalty, procured a patent from the ſame king, to found a gild or perpetual fraternity amongſt themſelves, to the honour of the holy croſs, conſiſting not only of men and women of Birmingham, but other adjacent places, and to conſtitute a maſter and certain wardens thereof; as alſo to erect a chantry of prieſts to celebrate divine ſervice in the ſaid church for the ſouls of the founders and all the fraternity; for whoſe ſupport, and of all other charges incumbent, there were 18 meſſuages, 3 tofts, 6 acres of land 40l. rent, lying in the above ſpecified town of Birmingham, and Edgbaſton then given thereto; the lands belonging to which Gild were, in the 37th of Henry the Eighth, valued at 31l. 2s. 10d. out of which three prieſts that ſung maſs in the church here had 5l. 6s. 8d. each; an organiſt at 33s. 4d. the common midwife 4s. per ann. and the bellman 6s. 8d. per annum; with ſeveral others of leſs conſequence.

Which lands, at the humble requeſt of the inhabitants, in the 5th of Edward the Sixth, were aſſigned by the king unto William Symmons, gent Richard Smallbrook, then bailiff of the town, John Shilton, Richard Swift, William Colmore, the elder, Thomas Marſhal, Henry Foxal, John Veyſey, William Boyce, John King, Thomas Cowper, John Willes, William Paynton, John Ellyatt, William Aſcherig, Thomas Smith, Robert Raſtel, William Colmore, the younger, Thomas Snowdon, and William Mitchell, inhabitants of this place, and to their ſucceſſors to be choſen in upon the death or departure out of the town, of any of the before receited perſons for the ſupport and maintenance of a Free Grammar School, within Birmingham, to be called the Free Grammar School of king Edward the 6th, for the education and inſtruction of children in grammar for ever, with one ſchoolmaſter and an uſher under, extending to the value of 20l. per annum; whereby the ſaid letters patent to continue unto the perſons above ſpecified, and their ſucceſſors to be held of the king and his ſucceſſors, as of his caſtle of Kenilworth, in free and common ſocage, paying 20s. yearly into the court of augmentation, at the feaſt of St. Michael, for all demands and ſervices whatever.

CLODSHALL's

CLODSHALL's CHANTRY.

IN the 4th of Edward the 3d, Walter Clodſhall, of Saltley, having obtained licence of William de Birmingham, chief lord of the fee, as alſo of the king, for the founding a Chantry at the altar of our lady, in the church of St. Martin, gave four meſſuages, 20 acres of land, and 18d. rent. all lying in the town of Birmingham, for the maintenance of one prieſt to celebrate divine ſervice there for the ſouls of him the ſaid Walter Clodſhall, Agnes his wife, their anceſtors and all the faithfull deceaſed.

In the twenty-firſt of Edward III, Richard de Clodſhall, ſon and heir of the ſaid Walter, gave five meſſuages, ten acres of land and 10s. yearly rent, lying in Birmingham, for the ſupport of another prieſt to celebrate divine ſervice at the ſaid altar, for the good eſtate of him the ſaid Richard and Alice his wife, during their lives in this world, and for their ſouls after their departure thence, as alſo for the ſouls of his father and mother, and of Fouk de Birmingham and Joan his wife, and all the faithful deceaſed.

When this cuſtom of leaving theſe kind of legacies ceaſed, and how thoſe already bequeathed were afterwards diſpoſed of, few people are ignorant---thoſe, however, who want information on that head, may refer to the hiſtory of the reigns of Henry the Eighth, and his immediate ſucceſſors, where they will find a full and ſatisfactory account.

After having ſaid ſo much reſpecting the town of Birmingham in it's ancient ſtate, which we hope will not be diſagreeable to our readers, we ſhall proceed to take a ſlight view of it in it's preſent ſtate.

It appears from ancient hiſtories and records, that Birmingham was celebrated for it's manufactories of iron-wares ſo far back as the time of Edward the Confeſſor, and 'tis moſt probable little elſe was attempted for ſeveral centuries.---The various toys, japanned goods, buttons and buckle-trades, &c. &c. owe their origin to much more modern dates — however for variety, beauty, and cheapneſs, perhaps they exceed the whole univerſe.

The ſituation of the town is agreeable and nearly in the the centre of the kingdom—it is about two miles long, including the hamlet of Deritend, and not much leſs in breadth, and is nearly in the form of a half moon.

The number of inhabitants, from a late accurate ſurvey, is calculated at Forty Thouſand, and the houſes at about Seven Thouſand; but as the comparative populouſneſs of Birmingham, with many other principal trading towns, has been the ſubject of much diſpute, we ſhall here, for their information and ſatisfaction, preſent our readers with a ſcale of the number of inhabitants which the moſt flouriſhing towns in this and other kingdoms contained, on an eſtimate taken in the year, 1773 (excepting Birmingham, which was numbered in 1770) and publiſhed in Enfield's hiſtory of Leverpool:

London	651,580	Birmingham	30,804
Paris	480,000	Mancheſter	24,533*
Amſterdam	200,000	Norwich	24,500
Leverpool	34,407	Leeds	16,380

When it is conſidered, that ſeven years have elapſed ſince this calculation was made, and that there has been a great increaſe of houſes and people during that period, one may ſafely preſume that Birmingham, at this time, exceeds Leverpool, in the number of its inhabitants.

The concourſe of nobility, gentry, merchants and traders, (as well foreigners as natives) who are continually flocking hither is amazing, the former out of curioſity, the others in the way of buſineſs, who ſeldom return without expreſſing their aſtoniſhment and ſatisfaction at the number and ingenuity of the artificers, who may be ſaid to be really in poſſeſſion of the philoſopher's ſtone, and literally to have the power of converting iron, &c. into gold without any conſiderable diminution of it's weight.

The trade of this place has greatly the advantage over any other in theſe kingdoms---perhaps there is more money returned in Mancheſter than Birmingham, but then the materials of which their goods are fabricated, are much more valuable than thoſe with which the general run of ſuch as are got up here are made—as a pair of buckles, a watch chain, a ſword hilt, &c. which are worth from one to five pounds when finiſhed, and some a great deal more, can be made from materials which were not originally worth one penny, which muſt convince any impartial man the great advantages ariſing to the public from this branch of trade more than any other, and the materials chiefly uſed are ſuch as are the produce of our own kingdom.

The public buildings are, St. Martin's Church, ſeveral times mentioned in the preceding part, which is an ancient ſtructure, has a lofty ſpire, 12 good bells, and an excellent ſet of muſical chimes, which are kept in good order, play every three hours, and a different tune every day.

St. Philip's church is a grand modern ſtructure, having a fine tower, with ten bells and a handſome cupola above it. It has likewiſe a ſet of muſical chimes which play every three hours, but not at the ſame time with thoſe of St. Martin, and the tunes are varied every day. The ſituation is high, and the church-yard, which for beauty and extent, is, perhaps, not ſurpaſſed by any in this kingdom, is handſomely laid out with gravel walks, and being wholly ſurrounded with trees, forms, in the ſultry ſeaſon, a cool and welcome ſhade to the inhabitants, and in the wintry months, affords a retreat, dry, pleaſant, and airy.

St. Bartholmew's chapel is a plain but neat building, has a clock, and a good chapel yard.

St. Mary's chapel is built in an octagonal form, will contain a great number of perſons, and has a commodious chapel-yard.

A new chapel, intended to be dedicated to St. Paul, is now building on a fine riſing ground a ſmall diſtance from New-hall-ſtreet.—The erection of this edifice, we are told, is undertaken by a Gentleman, whoſe taſte and ability afford every reaſon to expect that the building will be a ſtriking ornament, and that it will be executed in ſuch a manner, as to reflect equal honour on the Town and the Architect.

There are beſides for public worſhip, two meeting-houſes houſes for Preſbyterians, one for Quakers, and three for Diſſenters of different denominations.

The Free Schools are three in number; one of which (before-mentioned) ſituated in New-ſtreet, is a very handſome ſtructure, founded by King Edw. 6th. whoſe effigy is placed in a niche, over the entrance, in which about 120 or 130 ſcholars are educated in Latin, Engliſh, Writing, and Arithmetic, under the tuition of two maſters and an aſſiſtant, for the firſt claſs; an Engliſh, and a Writing maſter, and to theſe, a French-maſter has been lately added. There is a good clock, and a bell to give notice when the ſcholars are to repair to, and return from ſchool.

The ſecond ſchool, ſituate in St. Philip's churchyard, was founded in 1724: it is ſupported by the munificence and voluntary contributions of well-diſpoſed inhabitants of the town, together with divers legacies that are bequeathed to it. In this ſchool, 60 boys and 30 girls are wholly maintained and educated, they are admitted from ſeven to ten years old, and when 14 are put apprentices to trades or ſervices: the boys are inſtructed in Engliſh, Writing, and Accounts; as are likewiſe the girls with the addition of needlework.

The third, ſituate in Old Meeting-ſtreet, is a late inſtitution, ſupported chiefly by a voluntary ſubſcription amongſt the Proteſtant Diſſenters, in which 27 children are maintained, cloathed and educated; and apprenticed out at proper ages.

The Workhouſe is ſituated in Lichfield-ſtreet, where the poor are comfortably provided for, there being near Six Thouſand Pounds annually raiſed by levies for their ſupport.

There are two croſſes, one called the Welch, and the other the Old croſs, over the latter is held the Court of Requeſts, and moſt of the town meetings.

Perhaps it will be unneceſſary to inform the public, that we have amongſt our public buildings, two Theatres, both of which are at this time ſhut up, owing to a diſagreement now unhappily ſubſiſting between the friends of the reſpective houſes.

At a convenient diſtance from Birmingham, are Duddeſton-gardens, commonly called Vauxhall, where, during the ſummer ſeason, Muſical Entertainments are exhibited after the manner of that near London. The gardens are well laid out, and the houſe affords good Entertainment. There is for amuſement a fine bowling-green, billiard-table, &c.

In the Winter there are concerts, balls, &c. in a new erected building, called the Hotel. This is really a fine building, and ſeems well-adapted to the proper accommodation of polite company, or were there ſtabling &c. belonging to it, it would make a noble inn; but whether the ſum neceſſary in furniſhing ſuch ſpacious and elegant apartments, for the reception of ſtrangers, be an obſtacle to any perſon's taking it, or whether any other cauſe exiſt, unfavourable to its being occupied, we cannot determine; thus much is clear, that it hath never yet been applied to the purpoſes for which it is preſumed it was originally intended.

An Hoſpital, towards which a conſiderable ſum was ſubſcribed, was begun in the year, 1767, and ſo far carried forward that it was covered in; in this ſituation it has remained ſeveral years without being finiſhed: a ſcheme is now on foot for that deſirable end. It is indeed ſomewhat ſtrange that it ſhould remain ſo long unendowed; the more ſo, as the general opinion is deciſively in favour of its utility. Such an aſylum for the ſick and lame ſeems peculiarly neceſſary in this place; where the manufacturers are, by the nature of their employment, expoſed to manifold injuries in their limbs and health. That Humanity and Tenderneſs, for which this country hath ever been admired and diſtinguiſhed, call loudly upon thoſe who are bleſſed with affluence to contribute liberally to the perfecting of ſo charitable an inſtitution, and to taſte the pleaſure of adminiſtering to the relief of a ſuffering fellow creature.

In the neighbourhood is a great number of noble and gentlemens' ſeats; and many of the merchants and manufacturers have their country houſes in the environs of the town.

Within a few years ſeveral acts of parliament have been obtained (ſome of which have been attended with good effects) viz. the act for lighting, widening, and cleanſing the ſtreets; the navigation act; and the aſſay act.

The

The navigation act, that is, for making a navigable canal from the collieries at Wednesbury, from whence the town is supplied, which was begun in 1768, and finished in about a year and a half, has been attended with uncommon advantages, in the article of coals only; in furnishing them for half the price at which they were formerly; and the quantities consumed here are astonishing; besides those burnt in common household use, fires being necessary in almost every branch of manufactory. This cut since that time has been extended in such a manner, as to open a communication with many of the principal trading towns in the kingdom, viz. Shrewsbury, Gloucester, Bristol, Liverpool, Manchester, Hull, Gainsborough, York, and all others situate on the Severn, the Mersey, the Humber, &c.

The reader will readily conceive that it must likewise make a very material difference in the carriage of many other articles used here, which are mostly heavy, such as Copper, Brass, Iron, &c. and thereby be a very great saving to the public.

At the head of the Navigation, is a neat small octagon building, in which are the clerks offices, a committee room, and a clock. It is unnecessary to point out the utility of public clocks, in all large places, and particularly where considerable manufactories are carried on.

The assay act furnished powers for establishing an office of Assay to try and stamp wrought plate; which before that time was obliged to be sent up to London to be tried: this was a great inconvenience, and consequently a great discouragement to the manufacturer. Since obtaining the above act many people have done something in that article.

In consequence of the other, several houses, &c. have been taken down, in order to open passages for the convenience and safety of the inhabitants and travellers, besides which many other improvements have been made.

About three years ago the first Hackney Coach was set up, since which time they have increased to about twelve, and both the proprietors and the public find their account in them.

This

This town being no corporation, is governed by two bailiffs, two conſtables, and a headborough, and is free for any perſon to come and ſettle in it, which contributes not a little to the increaſe of its trade, buildings, and inhabitants, the rapidity of which is truly amazing.

The principal Market ſtill continues on Thurſday, although there are markets for many articles, on Mondays, Tueſdays, and Saturdays.

There are two Fairs, one of which is held in Whitſun-week, and the other at Michaelmas, and is particularly remarkable for the prodigious quantity of onions brought for ſale.

Having given a ſlight ſketch of the Town in general, which is all our limits will admit of, we ſhall only obſerve, that in the ſcale of government it is undoubtedly one of the firſt places in the empire, conſider it whatever light you pleaſe.—The number, opulence, ingenuity and induſtry of it's inhabitants, are univerſally allowed; the riches they draw from other countries towards the ſupport of their own, is equally obvious as their connexions are unbounded.

To enumerate the particular manufactories would be impoſſible, or to aſcertain the time of their introduction---the reception they have met with in every country in Europe, as well as in moſt other parts of the globe, convinces us of their utility, and the ſuperiority they have over all others, in point of cheapneſs at leaſt, and bringing our natural and inveterate enemies, as well as our ſincere friends, to be purchaſers, is very flattering, as well as profitable to the whole kingdom; whilſt the increaſing demand may ſerve to aſſure us that Birmingham is not yet arrived at it's meridian.

The number of reputable manufacturers is very great, who vie with each other in improving the reſpective branches in which they are concerned, that to ſignalize any one from the reſt, would be an unpardonable affront to all, and were we ſo inclined, although we are acquainted with the productions of a great many, we ſhould not know to whom the preference is due.—Scarce a week paſſes but ſomething new makes it's appearance, and thus the proprietor or inventor enjoys a temporary ſuperiority, to which in in a few days ſome other generally ſucceeds.—That the ſame laudable ſpirit of emulation, and thirſt for honeſt fame may ſtill continue; that the Arts and Artiſts of Birmingham may ſtill obtain a welcome reception, and deſerve and meet with a diſtinguiſhing preference in every part of the known world; and that the town may, by the number, reſpectability, and public ſpirit of its inhabitants, always remain, what it now confeſſedly is, the pride, as well as a material ſource of its country's greatneſs and glory, muſt be the unfeigned wiſh of every true Briton; of every friend to trade and commerce; but of none more ſo than of the public's grateful and obliged ſervants, the Editors of this Directory.

The first Directory of Birmingham, published in 1770 by Sketchley and Adams, contains at the end a List of Public Offices &c. These are—The Bank, 7, Dale End; Excise Office, 89, Dale End; Navigation Office, 30, Newhall Street; Lamp Office, 28, Spiceal Street; Court of Request Offices, 39 New Street; and "The Court of Conscience held at the Old Cross every Friday."

A Street List is also appended giving the number of houses and inhabitants (male and female) in each street.

The summary is:—6,025 houses; 15,363 male inhabitants, 15,441 female—total, 30,804.

In 1750 the number of houses was 4,170, and of inhabitants 23,688, showing that the increase in the population from 1750 to 1770 was 7,116. Basing our calculations on these figures, we may estimate that the number of inhabitants at the date of the publication of the foregoing Directory, to be about 33,300.

NOTES.

It is estimated that the population of Birmingham in 1770 was 33,300. The population of Greater Birmingham of to-day is about 501,250.

It is difficult to estimate the mileage of the streets, and also the rating and rental value of the dwelling houses and other properties 120 years ago, but "in 1782 the Overseers of the Poor of Birmingham Parish published a complete rate book, giving the names of all the inhabitants, alike those who were, and who were not, rated. This volume is now very rare, and is especially worth referring to as indicating the vast number of exemptions then allowed, and the enormous difference between that period and the present in the value of property in the principal streets of the town. The return was issued in parts or divisions, classed as follows:—(1) Edgbaston Street quarter; (2) Bull Street quarter; (3) Middle Town quarter; (4) Dale End quarter. These parts contain only the entries of persons actually rated; but there was also issued in one volume of 77 pages "A Copy of the Grand Levy Book; or an account of all the Inhabitants who pay, and those who do not pay, the Poor's Rates in Birmingham. Printed by Pearson and Rollason, 1787." The list thus published contains the entries of 12,000 houses, &c., of which only 3,000 were rated to the poor. The 9,000 which were not rated were classed as follows:—

500	above	£9	and under	£10.
500	,,	£8	,,	£9.
2,000	,,	£7	,,	£8.
3,000	,,	£6	,,	£7.
2,000	,,	£5	,,	£6.
1,000	under	£5.

The rating seems, indeed, to have been strangely unequal. While there were 6,000 houses of above £6 yearly value altogether unassessed to the rate, there were many rated of the values of £5, £4, and even so low as £2 yearly. All the values assessed were, however, very low. In Spiceal Street, for example, the highest assessment—or rental as the Overseers put it—was £18; in Edgbaston Street the house and warehouse of Mr. Abraham Spooner, a leading merchant, £34; in Smallbrook Street, £12, excepting the Riding House—then occupied by the Rev. Mr. Curtis, which was rated at £35, the land attached to it being rated at the same amount. In the Bull Ring the highest rental was £30; in Suffolk Street, £13; in the Old Hinkleys several houses were rated at £1. In New Street the ratals were strangely low; the highest—the Play House (Theatre Royal)—stood at £50; Kettle's house and steelhouse works, £26; and other houses and warehouses at from £8 to £15. In Peck Lane we have an "Elabatory" (Laboratory), rated at £3. In Temple Row, then one of the best residential streets, the highest ratal is £40 paid by Dadley and Palmer; Dr. Ash, the physician for his house and stables, is rated at £16. In Colmore Row many persons escape altogether: the highest amount is £20. In Newhall Street, Dr. Male, whose house formerly stood on the site of the Union Club, is rated at £16. Clay, the papier-maché maker, at £14; Samuel Garbett, a leading brassfounder, at £16; William Chance, the merchant, at £10;—these are the highest amounts. In Paradise Row (now Paradise Street) there is nothing higher than £14, excepting the Navigation Office (Old Wharf), which stands at £42. Park Street and the neighbouring smaller streets are almost blank, everybody escapes rating. In Digbeth the ratals run generally from about £3 to about £24—the bulk being under £10, with one conspicuous exception, "Sampson Lloyd and Co., mill and meadow, £44." In Worcester Street the rents range from £3 to £13. Queen Street though full of houses, is nearly a blank as to rating, almost all the residents escaping from local burdens. In regard to this street there is a curious entry—six houses, rated at 4s., having appended to them note "paid by Mr. Ruston," possibly an example of the compounding system. In the middle and busiest streets of the town the rates are proportionately as low as in other quarters. In High Street for example, there are many houses that are not rated at all and others are plainly rated below their value. Thus William Hutton, the historian, stands at £20, although his business as a stationer was then probably the most important of its kind in the town.

The highest ratal in this street is "W. Taylor's house and shopping," £68. Bull Street another principal thoroughfare ranges from £10 to £18 in ratal. In Snow Hill the highest amount is £23; Livery Street has few houses rated at more than £2 or £3. In Steelhouse Lane, the highest amount, entered to "Samuel Galton"—the premises used lately as the Children's Hospital—is £50; the rest are rarely higher than £5. In the Square, then a good residential place—Mr. Hector, the surgeon, is rated at £13, "Sampson Lloyd" at £20, and other properties at £8, £10, and £12. These examples are enough to show the comparatively small estimated value of property at that date and the imperfection of the rating arrangements. To this it should be added that most of the back streets appear to have been entirely left out of assessment, and that in many of the principal streets there are long lists of houses to which no ratals are affixed." *

The rateable value of the property in Birmingham of to-day (1896) is £2,217,392. There are 261 miles of streets and 266 miles of sewers.

(The City Surveyor has been good enough to supply these figures.)

THE TRANSFORMATION OF BIRMINGHAM.

HALF A CENTURY'S WORK BY MR. TILL.

"It would have been a misfortune if Mr. Till had been allowed to retire from the Borough Surveyor's Department without giving the public, whom he has served so well, some idea of the wonderful change that has been effected in Birmingham during the half century that he has been associated with official life. We made a suggestion to Mr. Till some time ago that he should help us to prepare a concise record of his work, but we found him so modest and diffident in regard to his own achievements that there did not seem to be much chance of obtaining the desired information. However, our worthy ex-Surveyor, who unfortunately is not in very good health just now, consented to submit himself to an informal interview on the subject of Old Birmingham and the New, and it will be seen from the details which we have been able to gather what an energetic, sagacious, and faithful servant Birmingham has lost. In losing Mr. Till, we must recognise the fact that we are parting with the man who has played the largest part in the making of modern Birmingham.

"In 1851 Birmingham consisted of 8,420 acres, and was controlled by various governing bodies, each of whom had their own notion of how the place ought to be conducted. The improvements, however, were not keeping pace with the development of the borough, and it became obvious to many of the city fathers that various powers would have to be centralised before any real good could be accomplished. Accordingly, in 1851 an Act was obtained for the betterment of the district, and the hamlets of Deritend, Bordesley, Duddeston, and Nechells were placed under the Birmingham municipal wing, instead of being left to the tender mercies of the Bumbles of Aston Parish. The Birmingham and Edgbaston Parishes were also pooled, and the borough perceptibly awakened, and proceeded to cast off yoke after yoke. One of the first accomplishments was the abolition of the Turnpike Tollgate authorities. Bearing in mind the present size of the city, it seems strange to reflect that the place was saddled with tollgates as recently as 45 years ago. There were numerous trustees and turnpike bodies who exercised absolute jurisdiction over the principal roads. Not only did they assume command over the main arteries leading into the town, but they extended their influence within the borough boundary and were veritable monarchs of the road. The bodies in whom this power was vested naturally enough did not relish the idea of forfeiting their privileged collections, and in the end the Corporation had to compensate them. However, they were forced to relax their grasp within the borough boundary and take their toll houses elsewhere. New toll gates were put up outside the town, but by degrees they disappeared. The Dudley Road toll house used to stand at the corner of Spring Hill and Icknield Street. There was a garden attached, and after some of the space had been utilised for street improvements the remainder was turned into a Corporation store. More recently a further change was effected, and the branch library now marks the spot. In Hagley Road some of the ground upon which the toll-house was built was required for widening the thoroughfare near Sandon Road, but the rest was surrendered to

Lord Calthorpe, who erected a private house on it. The Bristol Road gate was situated near the junction of that thoroughfare and Priory Road, while to ensure as large a toll as possible, there was a bar put across Toy Lane, which ran at the back of the Gun Barrels, and joined Bristol Road. This lane has since been closed, and the traffic diverted along Edgbaston Park Road. The Pershore Road toll-house stood at the corner of Edgbaston Lane, while Kyrwick's Lane indicates the spot where the Moseley Road custodian located himself. The Stratford Road gate was fixed close to Ladypool Lane, while the Coventry Road toll was levied at the corner of Green Lanes. About this time the character of the dingy little houses with their low roofs and irregular lines began to undergo a change for the better. The streets also stood in need of attention, and it may be considered fortunate that the condition of the buildings almost compelled the owners to reconstruct them. It was this circumstance which gave Mr. Till his opportunity of effecting street improvements which are now invaluable. The heart of the town was little better than a network of wretched narrow streets, and gullets. Beyond New Street, High Street, and Bull Street, there was not a pavement in the place but what was set with "petrified kidneys," which imposed upon the poor pedestrian a severe test of temper. In Hagley Road and similar thoroughfares the paths were strewn with gravel, but the stones were of such a size that comfortable walking was out of the question entirely. With regard to some roads, however, the question was not one of convenience alone. They were in such a state as to be positively dangerous. They were studded with ruts and great holes, and in order that the reader may form an adequate idea of the state of affairs it may be mentioned that in Farm Street some of the holes had to be fenced round and lighted after dusk to prevent accidents. As already pointed out the town was riddled with wretched little streets running irregularly in almost every direction. Our forefathers appear to have had a weakness for elevating mankind with the aid of raised footpaths. In such roads as Hagley Road, Pershore Road, Great Brook Street, and Aston Road, the footway stood two or three feet above the level of the horse-road, while the sewage from the houses found its way down gullets into the gutters. In Deritend and Bordesley the Commissioners exerted themselves to give the road a presentable appearance, and the centre of the carriage-way was dressed with Rowley setts to the extent of three feet wide. Due economy had to be observed, and so the intervening space was filled with good-sized pebbles. A similar state of things existed in Duddeston and Nechells. It was not the paving of the streets, however, which occasioned the anxiety in the Surveyor's Department. The great problem to be solved was how to get the place practically remodelled on such lines as would meet the requirements of future generations. It was evident that the narrow ways would constitute a serious drawback, unless altered, and so their widening became imperative. If Mr. Till could only be induced to tell the complete story of how he opportunely wheedled a bit of land from this owner, gained concessions from companies, and diplomatically won favours from this and that trustee, it would occupy a prominent place in the history of the transformation of Birmingham. One of the most important concessions was obtained from the London and North-Western Railway Company. Prior to 1846, the trains for London as well as for the North started from Curzon Street Station, the old site now being used as a goods depôt. An Act was passed about that time authorising them to extend their line to the present position at the bottom of Stephenson Place. They also obtained permission to open up the Stour Valley line from Navigation Street in the direction of Smethwick. All this was not possible without very extensive interference with the existing thoroughfares. The Stour Valley work threatened to upset the sewage system in the vicinity of Navigation Street, but the difficulty was got over by raising the level of the street, and at the same time the gradients of Hill Street, Pinfold Street, and Temple Street were improved. The carrying of the line from Curzon Street swallowed up a portion of Bartholomew Street, and absorbed Peck Lane, Little King Street, Little Queen Street, Vale Street, Little Colmore Street, and other minor streets. They were all, however, of a dingy description, and their removal was a boon to the town, more especially seeing the advantages the borough gained by the change. Stephenson Place was made by the company, Queen Street was constructed, while Sheepcote Street, Sheepcote Lane, and Monument Road were raised and improved. The canal bridges were reconstructed, and sewage work was done to the extent of £8,000. All this expense was borne by the company, in consideration of the interference with the existing arrangements of the town. The Town Commissioners required the company to construct a public way through the station, but the company much preferred to maintain a private way, and their wish was granted conditionally on their carrying out further street improvements, and contributing a sum of £500. Almost simultaneously with these negotiations the Great Western Railway Company proceeded to open up their line, and in consideration of the closing of Brettle Street for the purposes of the line, they conceded sufficient land to widen Livery Street and Colmore Row. Steadily the work of improving the town proceeded. The kidney stones gradually gave way to Rowley setts. The Local Government Board seemed particularly pleased with the Rowley paving, and a demonstration of their durability, given by Mr. Till, caused the Board to extend the repayment of a "paving loan" to 50 years. There was a member of the Council, however, who held an opposite view, and during the process of paving a portion of the Gooch Estate he went to the length of removing the Rowley setts and substituting blue bricks. This is said to have been the first bit of blue-brick paving in Birmingham, and the author of it was afterwards known as "Blue-Brick Walker." It was the custom in those days for the Corporation to pay half the cost of paving, providing the property owner desired his footpaths paved. This system did not work out as well as the Corporation had expected, and in 1861 an Act was obtained enabling the Corporation to borrow £50,000 for paving purposes, and at a later date £140,000 was loaned. Even with these large sums at their command the authorities seriously debated whether it would not be advisable to first of all pave one side of the street and leave the other to be completed on a future occasion. In the end both sides of the streets were treated, and the oldest and worst paved street in Birmingham—Cherry Street—ceased to be notorious. As the place grew the Public Building in Moor Street became too small, and a suitable site for a more commodious building was sought for. Many trustees up to this time had assisted in the improvement of the town by concessions of land. Smallbrook Street, Dudley Street, and Hinckley Street were altered by the gift of land by General Vyse; and Colmore Row, Church Street, Broad Street, and Newmarket Street were improved by land allotted by the trustees of the Colmore Estate. It was from the latter source that the ground was obtained for the building of the Council House. Eden Place was partly a gift, while from other owners grants were made which enabled the surveyor to widen several other thoroughfares. While this has been going on the Corporation have turned churchyards into handsome recreation grounds, and have secured the many fine parks which now grace the city.

If it were needed to illustrate the remarkable change that has taken place in the character of Birmingham during the last half-century it would not be necessary to say more than that the street mileage has increased from one hundred to considerably over two hundred miles. All this work, together with the lighting, sewering, and draining, has extended under the personal supervision of Mr. Till, whose capacity for work has really been remarkable. In connection with the paving of the carriage-way, it is curious that Birmingham has shown a marked objection to the granite block pavement, and a distinct partiality for the macadam road. It is safe to say that there is no large town in the kingdom with anything like the traffic of Birmingham where there are so few paved streets as in the Midland Metropolis. The effect is that the pulverised macadam is washed into the sewers in large quantities, and cannot be removed except at great cost. Having accomplished so much laborious work, extending over half a century, Mr. Till can, at any rate, claim a rest, and in his comparative retirement he takes with him the best wishes and esteem of the whole community."
